Maybe the way you made love twenty years ago is the answer?

Video link: https://vimeo.com/123720340 pw: MeBay

Concept, Choreography, Text: Christine Gaigg
With: Adriana Cubides / Eva-Maria Schaller, Christine Gaigg, Petr Ochvat, Anna Prokopová
Set Design and Light Design: Philipp Harnoncourt
Costumes: Dorothea Nicolai
Music and Sound: Florian Bogner
Dramaturgical Advice: Wolfgang Reiter
Production: Eva Trötzmüller, artphalanx.at
Photos: Raphael Brand

Premiere: 4 October 2014, Dom im Berg Graz, Festival steirischer herbst
Production: 2nd nature
Coproduction: Festival steirischer herbst, Tanzquartier Wien
2nd nature is supported by MA7 Kulturamt der Stadt Wien

Length: 60 min
Performance in German Language with English surtitles

Contact: Haiko Pfost, haiko.pfost@me.com, mobile: 0043-699 19321022
Maybe the way you made love twenty years ago is the answer?

Once upon a time desire was a compliment ...

... yet today we tend to interpret desire as a threat. In the times of the sexual revolution, the call was for: freedom! Political freedom, free sexuality and self-determination were all part of the same package. Today, on the other hand – parallel to the evocation of over-sexualisation by media – hysterical debates and detailed regimentation define our relationship with love.

In Maybe the way you made love twenty years ago is the answer?, starting from a radical subjective position, Christine Gaigg deals with the changes in social importance of sexuality. The „stage essay“ is fuelled by two processes, both deliberately imperfect and conceptually stripping bare: There is Gaigg’s text, fragmented in the style of diary entries, opening the differences between forty to twenty years ago and today.

At the same time three dancers, Adriana Cubides, Anna Prokopová and Petr Ochvat improvise an erotic act. They do so on the choreographic base of somatic practices as dance technique. They thus expand the vocabulary of contemporary dance with subtle energetic states and sporadic moments, which are generally ascribed to pornography. The performance is like a tightrope walk. The dancer’s scene continuously changes its direction, sometimes impulsive, at times countering or underlining the words, oscillating between restraint and free flow of eroticism, between the explicit and holding in suspense.
Maybe the way you made love twenty years ago is the answer?

Press reviews

“... the erotic chamber play of Christine Gaigg had a highly polarizing effect: at any rate a quality.”
Salzburger Nachrichten

“The viewer is under no illusion: he is watching the preparation for sexual intercourse between these three bodies, or something similar – an archaic, obscene, breath-taking process. They are like bodies by the painter Francis Bacon, except that they are young, full of energy, dynamic. Time stands still and is only moved forward by moaning.”
Ö1

“Gaigg balances as if on a thin, high wire which she has suspended between the two groups of her hypothesis: those who still enjoyed carefree sex – during the 1970s and 1980s, when the only limit was a No. And those, mainly the younger ones, who are hemmed in by their fear of acting incorrectly.”
Die Presse

“The Second Sexual Liberation”

Sex has never been as free and yet subject to so many methods of discipline as today. Do we, therefore, need a new liberation for sexuality? This fundamental question might summarize the performance by the Austrian choreographer Christine Gaigg and three dancers at the ImPulsTanz-Festival. One thing that became clear was that the autobiographical claim of having one’s ‘own’ sexuality cannot escape the political debate about the body.”
ORF

Biography / Christine Gaigg